ABOUT THE CONFERENCE

After decades of efforts by some to slow the perceived expansion of intellectual property rights (IPR) around the globe, policymakers and courts in a number of countries have responded by placing greater limitations on IPR.

Now that such limits have been in effect for a few years, researchers have been able to start measuring the impact on innovators, creators, and the overall economy. C-IP²'s Annual Fall Conference brings together leading researchers, policymakers, creators, and innovators to share their experiences and results.
